

Reprinted from Daily Lift, November 20, 2014.
Republished with permission of the Christian Science Publishing
Society. All rights reserved.

God in the workplace

By Elise L. Moore, C.S.B.

There's a Bible verse I love to think about when praying for work-related problems. It's Romans 8:28, and it says "We know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose."

All things working together for good, to me means that God is preparing everyone involved. No one is left outside of God's loving care. God, divine Mind is preparing me for opportunities and God is preparing others as well. If I feel I'm ready to move forward, I can be patient while God opens the way. If I'm lagging behind, I can know that others will be patient while divine Mind spiritualizes and uplifts my thought. One of the definitions of patience is "cheerful waiting." We can be cheerful while God animates each of us to drop pride and work together harmoniously. So today, let's know that God is at work in the workplace bringing all things together for good.